

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

The Harvard University Press has in contemplation the issue of a series of Harvard Studies in Theology. The editors of the Harvard Theological Review have arranged that some of the series shall be published in the form of Extra Numbers of the Review, which will ordinarily be furnished gratuitously to the subscribers to the Review. This will make possible the execution of the plan, long cherished by the editors and announced when the Review was established, of publishing valuable contributions to theological thought and knowledge which might be so long as to occupy an entire number.

The first of these Extra Numbers will be sent to subscribers to the Review in the course of the present summer. It will contain an essay by Professor Charles C. Torrey of Yale University on "The Aramaic Original of Acts i-xv." In compensation, the number of pages in the July and October numbers of the Review is somewhat diminished.